Student Affairs Mission
Together we provide an environment for our diverse student population to reach their greatest potential through inspiration, accessibility, and support.

Student Affairs (SA) has been intentionally building assessment capacity and developing a culture of evidence since 2011. With national research supporting that “learning and personal development during the undergraduate years occurs as a result of students engaging in both academic and non-academic activities, both inside and outside the classroom”, SA demonstrates its commitment to student learning by making the development and measurement of student learning and programmatic outcomes a priority (Astin, 1993; Pascarella and Terenzini, 1991).

Building a Culture of Learning
Throughout FY13, SA departments engaged in student learning outcomes workshops and trainings led by the Student Affairs Assessment Team (A-Team), Dr. Maggie Culp - a nationally recognized educator, author, and consultant, and the Coordinator of SA Research, Assessment and Staff Development and began drafting outcomes. SA departments continued to advance the student learning outcomes agenda in FY14 and FY15 by establishing at least two primary student learning outcomes and developing an assessment plan for measuring each. Each year, this effort resulted in the compilation of approximately 40 specific and measurable student learning outcomes that illustrate the value of SA programs and services.

Creating a Common Language
To further support institutional alignment efforts, Student Affairs Advocates for Visible Learning (SA ePortfolio team), in collaboration with the A-Team and Student Affairs Leadership Team, established the new Student Affairs Student Outcomes (SASO’s). Student Affairs aims to create and sustain an environment that supports students to attain these desired outcomes and become the best versions of themselves.

SASO’s provides a framework for Student Affairs to align engagement activities and services to student learning and development and a systematic approach for the measurement of student learning outcomes Student Affairs wide. This framework serves as a guide and common language in understanding contributions to student learning, creating meaningful interactions with students, presenting opportunities to students, and building connections between learning and growth occurring throughout their academic coursework, career preparation, outside-the-classroom activities, and daily life.

Developing a Holistic Framework
Student Affairs Student Outcomes support the holistic learning and development of students with priority to the areas of sense of self, balanced life choices, global citizenship, and creative application.

Introduced throughout FY16, SA departments will build on SASO’s by supporting at least two learning outcomes that align with this framework and measuring those outcomes throughout the year. FY17 will also introduce a common question bank to support the systematic measurement of the SASO’s.
